Minerva Cuevas was born in Mexico City in 1975. Her paintings, sculptures, and installations call attention to current social issues and encourage us to think about what we might find if we look beyond appearances and packaging at the inner-workings of people, industries, and governments. Today, we will be creating a work inspired by the centerpiece of her 2015 Feast and Famine exhibition at Kurimanzutto, “Bittersweet - Hershey’s.”

MATERIALS
- 1 piece brown paper
- 1 piece black paper
- Scissors
- Craft glue
- White pencil
- Colored pencils
- 5" square of tin foil
- Black permanent marker

STEP 1:
Cut both pieces of construction paper in half. Draw a bumpy oval in the middle of the black paper, leaving a little more room above the oval than below, and cut it out.

STEP 2:
Place the cut-out black paper over the brown paper and line up the edges. Trace the oval onto the brown paper with the black permanent marker.

STEP 3:
Use a pencil to make a drawing that represents aspects of your personality, life, hopes and dreams... whatever makes you YOU. Go over the pencil with the black marker and color in your drawing.

STEP 4:
Using the white pencil, write your name in thick lines across the top of the black paper. Draw a small, solid rectangle in the lower right corner and use the marker to add vertical lines so it looks like a bar code.

STEP 5:
Turn the black paper over and glue the aluminum foil square over the oval. Poke a hole in the foil and peel back the edges so it covers the entire outside of the oval.

STEP 6:
Glue the black paper, foil side down, to the brown paper so it looks like the chocolate bar wrapper has been peeled open to reveal your drawing underneath.
